GOOD GUNS

Jim Corsini has probably one of the largest private collection of pistols and rifles in the country. He keeps them in his home in Mount Tremblin. If you want to see the guns used either in the conquering of the West or by our fighting forces, you should see his collection. Let me tell you about some of the firearms I saw when I visited him the early part of this month.

"What you see on my desk," began Jim is a modern version of the double derringer. It is made in Germany and imported into this country. It weighs only 13 ounces and measures 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ inches long. It used the .22 short, long, or long rifle rimfire cartridge. That includes either regular or high velocity.

I have gone over this modern version of the double derringer very carefully. The frame assembling is of a blackened nonferrous alloy. It is heavier than aluminum. You will notice that the smoothly rifled and chambered 3 inch barrels are in the form of steel sleeves pressed into the barrel housing.

Trigger pull on this gun appears to be rather heavy. Yet behind this gun is the history of Henry Derringer who they say spent over fifty years as a gunsmith before he developed his little gun. And it was copied and counterfeited by manufacturers. When you think of the days of the Forty-Niners, you must bear in mind that many of those men were armed with derringers.

Henry Derringer, Jr. spelled his name with one "r" but you will find the gun he created and which was so often imitated, known as a Derringer — with two "r's". He was born in the year 1786 in Pennsylvania. He was an apprentice to a gunsmith and thus learned the trade. In 1806 he opened his own shop in Philadelphia. He began to manufacture firearms for the United States Government in 1814. His muskets in the hands of American troops helped to win the Battle of New Orleans. Henry Derringer, Jr. kept on manufacturing muskets and rifles and also made percussion pistols. He deserved a lot of credit because he was one of the first pistol makers in this country to use percussion caps for ignition in place of the flintlocks.

If you are a gun collector, then you know what the word "derringer" refers to a small, lightweight simplified type of large caliber hand arm. Funny thing about this man. He was smart and advanced in one thing: He saw that the percussion cap was better than use of the flintlock, but he couldn't see that a breech loader was better than a muzzle loader. So he kept on making muzzle loaders.

His guns were very popular during the period starting with the Forty-Niners to about the end of the 1860's. Now something about the imitation guns that appeared on the market. Some of his employees left him and started their own gun company turning out guns that were close copies of the "Derringer." As far as I can get the story, another man by the name of Deringer was paid to use his name on these guns. So they bore that name and there was a lot of confusion. Today we refer to all of these guns as "Derringers," but the original made by Henry is known as a Deringer Derringer! Buffalo Bill was once given a double-barreled over-and-under derringer by the Remington Company. On the ivory grip of this gun was engraved a Buffalo. However, our hero gave this gun away to William Fielder and it is still in existence.

There were many other companies in this country that made good firearms during the past century. One of these was the firm of Bacon & Company which was established by Thomas K. Bacon in the year 1852. We do know that it also manufactured an underhammer pistol, a single shot ring-trigger pistol and a six-shot underhammer pepperbox revolver. I have in my collection their single shot pistol which is of .36 caliber and had a center-hung hammer. What may seem unusual is the fact that the round and octagonal barrel on it could be unscrewed to load the pistol. You had the problem of patents and patent infringements even in those days. Apparently one of their pistols infringed the Rollin White patent and soon was taken off the market.

They also produced a six-shot Navy revolver in .38 caliber which was rimfire. It had a 7 1/2 inch barrel and a spur trigger. They also made five-shot and a seven shot revolver. So just bear in mind that our hero out West might have used a Bacon revolver, a derringer, or a Colt.

I mentioned that Henry Deringer, Jr. did not adopt the idea of a breech loading pistol. The one in the red box is a Sharps breech-loading pistol. Christian Sharps sold his breech-loading percussion pistols to civilians as well as to the army. Allen and Wheelock as well as the Allen and Thurber were well known low-priced single shot pistols that were used during this period.

I have mentioned Buffalo Bill. His principal competitor and eventual partner in wild west shows was Gordon W. Lillie. He used the name of "Pawnee Bill." One of his feature acts was to throw glass balls up into the air. Then out would come his six shooters. With "perfect accuracy" he would aim quickly, pull the trigger, and the glass balls would burst. How did he do it?

You will notice this Frontier .44 which is on the wall. Looks like any other Frontier made by Colt. But with this exception. It has a smooth-bore barrel and is slightly choked. "Pawnee Bill" used a pair of guns like this. They were loaded with bird shot, so that when he aimed in the general direction of the glass balls, there was little danger of his missing.

I have been told that Buffalo Bill himself used a similar trick. One of his feats was to fire his rifle at balloons which were let loose and floated up from the ground. One day a reporter picked up a rifle shell dropped by Buffalo Bill. To his amazement he found it was a special bullet. It was loaded with bird shot! I don't know the answer to the question you want to ask: Did "Pawnee Bill" teach it to Buffalo Bill? Or the other way 'round? Or did they hit upon the idea separately?

I have on that wall an interesting rifle. Made by Jonathan Browning, the father of John Moses Browning. Jonathan Browning, was an outstanding riflemith. He produced weapons that were as advanced as possible in the days of loose powder, ball and percussion cap. He was born in Sumner County, Tenn. in 1805.

He went to Nashville for his apprenticeship in riflesmithing. When he was about 21 years old he moved to Davidson County in the same state. Here he set up his own gunsmithing business. Then he moved to Illinois where he combined agricultural pursuits, gunsmithing and blacksmithing. From 1842 to 1846 he conducted his business in Nauvoo, Ill., then going to Kanesville where he manufactured guns, wagons and other equipment. Also kept up his agriculture and was a magistrate — a lot of things to keep a man busy. We have the following advertisement which he placed in the Kanesville Frontier Guardian on September 19, 1849:

"Gunsmithing."

The subscriber is prepared to manufacture to order, improved Firearms, viz: revolving rifles and pistols; also slide guns, from 5 to 25 shooters. All on an improved plan, and he thinks not equalled this far east. (Farther west they might be.) The emigrating and sporting community are invited to call and examine Browning's improved fire-arms before purchasing elsewhere. Shop eight miles south of Kanesville on Musquito Creek, half a mile south of Trading Point.

Jonathan Browning."

During his stay in Kanesville, Jonathan Browning produced two different styles of repeating rifles. One was a slide-action weapon that had a rather ingenious arrangement, whereby the five-shot magazine alined each chamber concentric with the bore. The magazine was a rectangular piece of bar iron chambered to accommodate powder and ball. The magazine, or bar, slid through an opening in the breech from left to right and was manipulated by finger pressure on a small lever to the side. At the same time it jacked the action forward, forming a gas-tight seal between chamber and barrel. This weapon was hailed as a great achievement by the gun trade. It allowed the user not only to have several quick shots ready in the gun but also to carry a number of loaded magazines.

Success encouraged Jonathan to make another repeater of different design. This time the breech mechanism housed a cylinder having six chambers, operating somewhat on the order of the single action revolver. Neither of these weapons which added to the fame of Jonathan Browning throughout the frontier was ever patented. It is indeed probable that he did not even consider the idea.

When you come to visit me next month, I will show you some of the weapons used by our military forces and you can write about them for your readers.
